TRINITY COLLEGE,

HARTFORD, CONN.

THIS College was chartered by the state of Connecticut in 1823, and as this result was chiefly due to the activity and sagacity of the Rt. Rev. Bishop Brownell, he may justly be regarded as its founder. This college does only college work. There is no divinity, law, medical or other professional school connected with it, as it is intended to give a liberal Education, adapted to fit young men to enter most advantageously upon the study of the Learned Professions or a business career after graduation. Its course of study is therefore conservative, adhering to that system which long experience has shown to be most effective. In all essential respects its course of study is similar to that of the leading American Colleges, its requirements for admission with those at Harvard and the twelve associated colleges, of which this college is one, according to the schedule adopted by them some years ago. Its situation is elevated, commanding a beautiful view, and very salubrious. Its buildings are new and unsurpassed for convenience and comfort.

COURSES OF INSTRUCTION.

The college offers four courses of instruction, viz.: I. A COURSE IN ARTS; II. A COURSE IN LETTERS AND SCIENCE; III. A COURSE IN SCIENCE; IV. A COURSE IN LETTERS.

The courses extend over four years, with the exception of the Course in Science, which is completed in three years.

Students completing the Course in Arts receive the degree of Bachelor of Arts. Students completing the Course in Letters and Science, or the Course in Science, receive the degree of Bachelor of Science.

Students who do not propose to pursue all the studies of any of the regular courses are permitted, under the name of Special Students, to recite with any class in such studies as, upon examination, they are found qualified to pursue.

SCHOLARSHIPS.

There are numerous Scholarships. These differ in value, some remitting the charge for tuition, and others both the charge for tuition and that for room-rent in whole or in part. For holders of Scholarships remitting the entire charges for tuition and room-rent, the Treasurer's bills are reduced to $42.50; and the necessary expense of such students including board and other personal items will not exceed $250, or $300 a year.

For Catalogues apply to the President or Secretary of the Faculty.

EDITORIALS.

FOR a young and growing nation to adopt customs which have existed for many years in some long established country is most always regarded by a large portion of the people of the new nation as showing an incapacity to originate ideas of its own. This is characteristic of the hopes and optimistic tendencies of youth, which is so confident of its own power. But as the nation grows, it begins to realize that it is well to profit by the experience and example of others that are older, and not to refuse some advantage simply because it was not originated by themselves. This is true in regard to a university custom ; that is, the wearing of the cap and gown. For years this has been the scholar's dress in the great universities of England and it is not until recently that it has come to be adopted in this country. Yale seems to have been the pioneer ; while Princeton and Amherst have followed her example. In the early history of Trinity she showed her advancement by wearing the costume at all times ; but later she changed her attitude and only a remnant survived in the wearing of it at Commencement. We do not know whether this change was due to indifference, or the fear of being alone in the observance. At present the question which was last year discussed, has been brought to our attention again by the adoption of the custom in other colleges, and it is sincerely to be hoped that Trinity will be one of the foremost in having the Seniors appear in cap and gown at Sunday chapel and on all public collegiate occasions.

IT is with pleasure that we receive the communication relative to the athletics of the college, published in this number. Seldom have the alumni shown such active interest in the welfare of our team as they have this fall, and these words from an alumnus call forth from us an acknowledgment of the hearty appreciation with which the undergraduates regard the efforts of all those who at any time during the season have given the eleven the benefit of their experience and skill. That the college is appreciative is witnessed by the large numbers who watch the practice when any alumni are here to coach, and THE TABLET voices the sentiment of all in expressing to these hearty thanks for their coöperation in the common cause, with the hope that the same interest may continue in the future.

THE LUCKY HEAD.

I HAD just come from Brazil after a three years' absence, and no sooner arrived in London, than I went to see Winslow to give him the curios I had collected for him—a grateful pandering to his hobby. He looked at them, and in thanking me for my trouble said, "You know, I have given up all that." "What!" said I, in surprise. "Oh you'll see why, when I tell you my story."

"Two years ago, after having been a year and a half married, I went to Canterbury, for a short rest. There one day in ransacking dingy shops, I came upon a rosy body, like a bit of well preserved Sevrè, among delapidated chairs and candle-sticks. Her shop was littered with the ordinary assortment of trash, but as I looked on the second shelf I noticed a curious object—a clay or earthenware head, enameled and very life-like. It wore an agonized expression which caught my fancy, and I determined to run the risk of a lecture from my wife on my extravagance, and to buy the curio at any price. To my joy it was remarkably cheap—only five shillings. "Especially" as the old woman chuckled, "for an original!" It had a history too, it always brought good luck to its possessor.

I had hardly tucked my bargain safely in the pocket of my great coat, when I met Jack Mortimer. "Ha!" I said, "So my good luck is beginning already." And as I had not seen him since our graduation at Oxford he asked me to take a bite with him at a tavern close by. After I had had something to eat and something more to wash the food down properly, we started to get up. "Awful sorry, old man! Hard up just now. Lend me a pound to pay for the refreshments and to return to London." It was train time so I did rather than get home late to an unusual dinner my wife had promised me. I had just reached home, when my wife, looking like Niobe on a very wet day, met me. "Harry dear," she said, "the baby is teething and the poor little thing has been crying all day, and I don't know what to do, and the cook insisted yesterday on going to the funeral and wake of some fifth cousin, and has not turned up since. So I've had to cook the dinner. I've burnt the—" here her voice, which up to that point had struggled bravely under overwhelming odds, was entirely lost in sobs. I tried to comfort her, but for my sake and my disappointment she still continued to grieve.

When at last, almost distracted, I promised her rashly anything, she recovered sufficiently, almost gaily to fetch me my already slender check-book. To crown it all, I walked the floor till the early morning hours with the baby, who yelled so loud that I did not wonder, at last, heaven wished to get rid of him, and next morning deciding that I had had enough luck to last me for an indefinitely long eternity, I sent the precious head to Jack Mortimer, just to show him that I bore him no grudge for the shabby trick he had played me. That morning seemed perfect paradise, and feeling that happy state of contentment which a hearty and good breakfast is apt to produce, I had lighted my cigar and opened the paper for a quiet bit of scandal, when these words in bold, and what seemed to me accusing print met my eyes :

“Another Anarchistic Plot!! The police have unearthed a far-reaching conspiracy of the Anarchists, which, for brutality and hatred towards unsuspecting mankind has rarely been equalled. The plotters have manufactured earthenware in unusual shapes in imitation of ancient works, and filled them with dynamite. These have been sold to bric-a-brac dealers throughout the country. The detectives are on the track of ——” I let the paper drop from my hands, and a sickening fear came over me. I had probably murdered Jack Mortimer. I would be arrested as an anarchist. I had no way of proving my innocence. My only hope lay in escape. Suddenly the door-bell rang furiously. It was too late, the police had tracked me ! The front door opened and I heard voices in the hall. Steps came nearer and nearer. I almost swooned. Pictures of my wife left desolate rushed through my brain, my baby's father was already a convicted criminal. The door burst open quickly, which you may perhaps consider strange when you hear the cause, and a messenger boy walked in carrying a package. There was a note attached to it written in the well known hand of my cousin. “Dear Harry,” it read, “Knowing your passion for curios I have sent you the enclosed as a small expression of my love. Having just received this gift from Jack Mortimer I—" I read no farther, but with trembling fingers pitched the package where it was most convenient, out of the window, and without waiting for the loud explosion which I knew must almost instantly occur, ran into the next room and slammed the door behind me.

Hearing no report, and seeing the walls, which I expected to totter at any moment about me, still remaining at their normal angle, I mustered sufficient courage at last to go into the yard. There I found my neighbor's goat wistfully regarding the remains of what proved to be on closer inspection, a genuine hawthorne jar of untold beauty and value."

"And what about your head?" said I.

"O that still stands in Mortimer's study, the admiration of all his friends—and my pound is still unpaid. Good-bye."

ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON.

"They buried him on a crag, which overlooks his home."

THE crest gleams bare, and the tempests roar,
While voices rise from the sounding shore,
Crooning low lullabies evermore,

Where his kindly heart lies sleeping.

The stars he loved strict vigils keep,

The waves still wildly upward leap,

And break the virgin silence deep,

Where his kindly heart lies sleeping.

PAINTING.

WITH wrapt-encircling fabrics of the land
Of farthest East—for there rich colors reign
Exclusive, and ignore the higher plain
Where Form and Drawing dwell—with calm command,
A woman sits at ease, girt by a band
Of sun-kissed gold below her breasts. By plain,
Swift, colored strokes she seeks to entertain
With bright-tipped brushes in her ivory hand.
“In realms of Art, my province is to tint
The objects of all beauty, till there springs
To being figures that seem born not made.
The contour of the life beneath I hint
With brush prismatic, and I bathe all things
In one harmonious glow of varied shade.”

SCULPTURE.

WITH quick, perceptive eyes that keenly roll
Their orbs o'er visionary forms until
On one embodied thought they 're fixed, and thrill
On thrill quick vibrates through his ardent soul;
His spirit longs to grasp in its control
The wave of thought which through his high-born soul
Begins to grow beneath his mighty will:
The sculptor stands with mallet, marble, scroll.
“Upon the borderland of life I mould
In deathless stone the charming, loved ideals
Of ages as they pass. From the great store
Within the world of image, I unfold
An almost breathing being which reveals
An ideal form with no progenitor.”

ARCHITECTURE.

ANOTHER with imperious brow and mien
And with a wand of potent touch walked through
A grove of restful shades. While there he drew
The wand full swiftly through the space. The green,
Rich coronal of leaves, became a screen
Of art-formed wood, and then there sprang anew
Tall pinnacles and heights from which there grew
A temple where groined arches intervene.

"In truth, I reign the king of highest arts,
All others are my serfs. Their simple sphere
Is ornament. Painting and Sculpture bring
Adorning gifts to glorify the parts
Of my great forms. Cathedrals grand I rear
Beneath my fostering hand. I am a King !"

L. P.

TO THE THESAION.

A THOUSAND storms have passed above thy head,
Bared in grand beauty to the Grecian sky,
And puny men have raised their futile cry,
The angry war-shout or the wail, when dead
Lies in their arms the corpse on glory's bed.
Where are the clouds which gleamed as they raced by ?
Where are the graves where stormy passions lie
And stained the Thirty's horrid hands with red ?
No answer comes. For all thine aged heart
Lies dreaming now of glories thine no more.
As some lone poet in the busy mart,
Hearing the traffic and the city's roar,
With glowing eyes, choosing the better part,
Lives in his fancy on some golden shore.

H. R. R.

THE VISION OF FRIENDSHIP.

I HAD a dream of Friendship. Old and wan
A shadow shape, moved in a shadow world,
Upon a lonely moor. An aspen tree,
Widowed of all its leaves, stretched its bare arms
As if to ask of yonder leaden sky,
And yonder inky pool, where all had gone
Which made its life once full of pleasing sounds.
A mourning bird, half frightened at its song,
With quavering note chirped to its ruined nest,
Then hid its faint eyes 'neath an icy wing.
And still the shadow moved along and held
The stalk of one pale daisy with its heart
Bereft of all its milky leaves. When lo!
Another Being, with its eyes of fire,
Swept as the Sun above the lone moor's brink.
Behind, its path seemed full of arrowed light,
And from the draperies trailing o'er its feet,
Whene'er the sad wind moved them, came a sound
So full of sweetness that it caused one pain.
And still that lonely figure crept along
Until it heard the first notes of that strain.
Then swift it stopped, and stretched its arms abroad,
And in the dead eyes such a longing came
That all the face beamed radiant as the moon,
When through the long nights of the summer's wane
She sleeps in beauty, pillowed on white clouds.
And closer, closer came those shadows twain
Until they mingled in a glory such
As never earth and heaven knew before,
And then the sad bird waking from its dreams
Of one he loved, gave such a call of joy
That all the moorland leaped with happy sound,
And far away there came an answering note,
And I awoke—and blessed that Vision fair.

THE TRINITY DEBATING UNION.

It is a great pleasure to notice that the custom of holding debates which existed here many years ago, and which was revived through the efforts of one of our professors and a few energetic students last year, is not now being forgotten. The series of debates, all of which, judging from the first, promise to be most interesting, was begun Friday evening, November 8th, in the Modern History room. The subject chosen for that evening was, "Resolved: That the saloons in New York should be closed on Sunday." Besides being a vital question and of interest for that reason, it was most ably handled by both sides. Mr. Washburne led the affirmative, supported by Mr. Pulsifer; Mr. Goddard the negative, supported by Mr. Chase. When the house was thrown open for general debate, as a proof of the interest which the leaders particularly excited, many spoke, among whom were Mr. Knapp, Mr. Custer, Mr. Forward, Mr. Parsons,

Mr. Danker, Mr. Lecour, and Mr. White. At the request of the chair, Dr. Martin made a few happy remarks. Dr. Martin, Mr. Barbour and Mr. Street, acted as judges. The house decided in favor of the negative; the judges, the affirmative. The attendance was excellent and representative of the college. The officers of the society consist of Mr. Goddard, President; Mr. W. Parsons, Vice-President; Mr. Danker, Secretary; and Mr. Travers, Treasurer. Mr. Goddard, ex-officio, Mr. Knapp, Mr. Custer, Mr. Street, and Mr. White constitute the Executive Committee.

ATHLETICS.

N. Y. UNIVERSITY 0; TRINITY 30.

ON November 2nd, Trinity defeated the N. Y. University, in a driving rain-storm. Water covered the ground to a depth of several inches in places, rendering it so slippery that it was almost impossible for the backs to start, or the interference to be of any assistance whatever. Under the circumstances, Trinity did well to run up thirty points; on a dry day the score would have undoubtedly been doubled. As it was, it would have been higher if Trinity had not continually played off-side and held in the line. The game was characterized by long runs by the backs and by Rich and Underwood, the latter scoring a touchdown from the kick-off. On account of the condition of the ground only fifteen minute halves were played. The line-up was as follows:

U. OF N. Y.	POSITIONS.	TRINITY.

NEW JERSEY ATHLETIC CLUB 0; TRINITY 18.

Trinity scored her fourth consecutive victory on Election Day, November 5th, winning a well-contested game from New Jersey on the latter's grounds at Bergen Point. A finer afternoon could not have been desired, and as a result a large crowd witnessed the game. New Jersey kicked off to Capt. Langford who carried the ball forward fifteen yards, when Trinity by tackle, bucks and end plays, advanced it well into Jersey's territory, where it exchanged hands several times. After about fifteen minutes play Trinity had the ball on her opponent's 15-yard line, when Cogswell took it around the end for a touch-down, from which A. Langford kicked a goal. For the remainder of the half the ball changed hands several times, being in Jersey's possession at about the middle of the field as time was called. In the second half Trinity braced up and played a much stronger and more aggressive game, bucking the heavy line of New Jersey for gains of five to fifteen yards. After seven minutes play Capt. Langford went through the line for twenty yards, scoring a touch-down, A. Langford kicking the goal; score, 12-0. Two minutes before time was called Trinity scored another touch-down, Beecroft being pushed over from the 5-yard line. A. Langford kicked the goal; score, 18-0. When time was called the ball was in Trinity's hands, about the center of the field. A large number of the fair sex were present, wearing Trinity's blue and old gold. The team was greatly encouraged by a large delegation of alumni who gave the yell with all their old time vigor. The line-up was:

N. J. A. C.	POSITIONS.	TRINITY.

Time of halves—Twenty-five minutes, and eighteen minutes. Touch-downs—Cogswell, W. Langford, Beecroft. Goals—A. Langford, 3. Referee—G. D. Hartley, '93. Umpire—Mr. Bernard, N. J. A. C. Linesmen—Greenley, '94, Dingwall, '95.

CRITICISM OF THE TEAM.

THERE is one predominant and serious defect in the Trinity team this season, and that is lack of team work. The men all play with almost total disregard of each other, and though there are several strong individual players on the team, yet their strength is seldom shown. All the practice and hard work possible will avail nothing, unless this fundamental mistake is corrected.

The lack of team work in the Trinity eleven arises from the most natural source, and that is the men do not thoroughly know the plays, and when a player runs with the ball he generally goes where he can, or thinks he can, and not where the signal sends him. There are, of course, certain cases when a runner may use discretion, but even that choice should be narrowed down to one of two things. Suppose for instance, the left half-back is signalled to go between right tackle and end. Well, the opposing tackle is carefully boxed and the right half tries to keep the opposing end from making the tackle, guarding particularly the space between tackle and end, the place where the signal indicated the play was going. But instead of going where he was sent the left half tries to circle the end, and as a result, loses ground; and his own man has fairly aided the opponent in tackling him. Such a play simply promotes confusion and makes the players lose confidence in themselves and each other. Such is the outcome of far too many of the team's plays. How different it would be if each man knew just when and how to count on every one of his men and could see whatever he did, count in the final outcome of every play. So a player should not only know what he must do in every case, but must know just what every one else on the team should, and will, do. With good team work the Trinity team would be on a basis where it could improve and be a strong team.

Another criticism on the work of the team is their high and ineffective tackling. There is no vim to this part of their work, and quick and hard play on the defense is equally as important as on the offense. As has been said, the team contains some strong and likely players, and their individual work may be criticised as follows :

Lord, center rush, is content with doing too little. He is strong, and, best of all, active, and should do much more for the team than he does. He should use his head more in putting the ball in play, and on defensive work should make it a point to try and make every tackle no matter where the play goes.

Cogswell, guard, plays with good spirit and has possibilities as a ground gainer. He should follow the ball more carefully, play lower, and be more active. He should break through and do more tackling and guard his center.

Merwin, guard, is not aggressive enough and should play harder in practice.

Bacon, guard, learns rapidly and when he gets so that he can handle his weight will be a valuable man. His faults are not serious, and those of a beginner and he should make a very good man.

Langford, tackle, is slow and plays with too little spirit. He waits for a play to come to him, rather than meeting it, or breaking it up in its inception, as a tackle should. With more life and earnestness in his work he would be a good man and a ground gainer.

Sutton, tackle, errs in often overrunning his man in trying to break up plays. He should keep his eyes open and use his head. This last is also a correction on his running with the ball.

Rich and Ellis, ends, seem to understand some of the principles of this positions, but for light men they are far too gentle. Their tackling is weak for this reason and they rarely stop a man without some gain. A little fierceness and vim would improve their work in tackling and interference.

Beecroft, half-back, has much to learn about his position and his running and interference are weak. He seldom goes where he is sent and runs weakly when he might be a powerful ground gainer. He has possibilities and if he will put more determination and life into his play he should do well.

Woodle, half-back, has many of Beecroft's faults, though he is a far better ground gainer. When he learns to use his strength in running and tackling he will be a strong half-back.

Coggeshall, quarter-back, plays with admirable spirit and is a good tackler. His worst fault is in passing. He stops, and fairly hands the ball to the runner, when he should have sent it to him by a short, quick pass, and have long since started as an interferer. Doing as he does he keeps himself from being useful, and impedes the runner; but he has a good head, and except this fault is a very valuable man.

Langford, (Capt.) full-back, runs his team well and plays well himself. His ground-gaining powers are good and he is a quick kicker. He would cover more distance in kicking if he used more care in dropping the ball. In running with the ball he should go harder and be sure to fall forward.

The team as a whole, should remember that foot-ball is played not alone with one's heels, but oftentimes head-work and care win games when brute force could not.

CORRESPONDENCE.

To the Editors of THE TABLET :

On Tuesday, November 12th, it was a very pleasing sight to see at the practice game so many alumni back. It really seems as if something should be done by the college at large to make this an annual occurrence. The Wesleyan-Trinity game is to us what a Yale-Harvard game is to those universities. No foot-ball team, no matter how strong it may be, can afford to get along without coaches. It is a lamentable fact that heretofore, the college has been without them during both the foot-ball and base-ball seasons. It is a fact that could this game between Trinity and Wesleyan be made a yearly contest, and the visit of the Alumni coaches be made so pleasant as to be an incentive for them to come back, it would undoubtedly be of inestimable benefit to the team. By this the writer does not mean any financial inducement to the alumni, for no alumnus would be found willing to accept any pecuniary aid from his Alma Mater, especially under the prevailing conditions of her finances ; but the incentive should come from the college at large, in the shape of a royal welcome—a feeling, extended to every one who returns, that although his work as an undergraduate is done, his efforts in an athletic way, to bring forward the name of Trinity, are still appreciated.

Very sincerely yours,

Alumnus.

AMONG THE COLLEGES.

FROM Harvard comes news welcome to the student of scholastic bent. The Board of Overseers of our greatest university have requested the faculty to take some measures to give scholarship public recognition. As things now are, they say "ranking scholars are no more considered the equals of athletes than Shakespeare was regarded the equal of the smallest gentleman in waiting."

Apropos of this news, we learn that Williams College is to honor and recognize literary and musical talent by having the men who belong to the various organizations of this class wear certain insignia.

Such an innovation of college life is to be commended, and tends to give literary and musical works in college an impetus. Athletic organizations should not have a monopoly on letters and insignia by which their members are distinguished.

AT Yale, of course, athletic insignia make the wearer very prominent. A new honor has been voted by the captains of the various athletic teams to the Yale intercollegiate tennis winner. It is to wear the famous Y. The first to have the honor is Malcolm Chase.

Perhaps the prettiest trophy presented this year at Yale, and one after the order of the golden foot-ball Trinity in the dim past once awarded, is that to be given the Yale champion base-ball nine. It is a golden belt, the size of a nickel, buckled in a circle and containing a golden base-ball pierced by a bat. It is designed for a watch-charm.

Yale's class in modern novels for juniors and seniors only, stands out bright and fresh among many a conservative and "dry-as-dust" branch of learning. One English or American novel a week is the course for the fall term. For those who are in love with a cosy corner, a good pipe, and a healthy modern novel, to them this course must be a Nirvana! And there are few students who do not appreciate the modern novel. The stirring "Gentleman of France" by Weyman; Bret Harte's "Luck of Roaring Camp;" Kipling's "Phantom Rickshaw;" "Treasure Island" by Stevenson, and "Trilby" the omnipresent, are a few of the works.

WELLESLEY, the college of the lakes and woodland, will now be more romantic than ever. After this year the students will perform none of the domestic duties they have hitherto groaned under. Kneading bread and making beds will no longer be required as a course for B. A. But to meet the extra expense arising from the suspension of assistance, tuition will be raised $50.

WESTERN students must have an abnormal thirst for knowledge. Some University of Chicago students were detected stealing an education by attending lecture courses they were not entitled to. In such a case as this Trinity would confer a Holland.

A great defect of the large universities has repeatedly been pointed out. It is that classes are so large that the average student does not come in contact with the highest grade of instructors. Trinity College may feel confident that here at least, faculties are quite "large enough to go 'round."

Referring to Trinity reminds us of a good story of Paul Du Chaillu, the great African explorer, who expressed himself as so pleased with his visit with us during the past winter. He lately related this incident of his Hartford trip. It was on the corner of Mulberry and Main streets late one evening, that M. Du Chaillu found a man very much intoxicated. With considerable difficulty the discoverer of the gorilla helped the unfortunate from the gutter, asking the man's name, "Jim," was the reply. "Say, what's your's?" "Paul," answered M. Du Chaillu. "Say, Paul," the loquacious unfortunate quickly replied, "have yez ever got an answer to yez epistle to the Corinthians?"

COLLEGES in America have established a record for themselves in the manner in which they have increased in numbers since the days of the Revolution. In the old colony days of education but nine colleges were in existence, Trinity, whose doors were first opened in 1823, making the thirteenth to be founded. Now there are four hundred and fifty-one. The luxury of a college education for our grandfathers has become almost a necessity for the men of the end of the XIX. century.

THE SKOP.

AND have you read an ancient scald
 And found no message in his rhymes?
 You say his similes are bald
 Or dusty with the work of Time.
 But think what meaning, good and true,
 They brought to men when they were new.

I once, in a deserted nook
 Of a hall cup-board, dark and old,
 Found these few pages of a book,
 The battle songs of Beowulf bold,
 And, through these tales of knightly strife,
 I read the quickening breath of life.

I saw the blood of kingly deeds
 Rise from the heart of Saxon thane,
 And gladly for its nation's needs
 Laugh in the horrid face of pain,
 Or fair and sweet, in endless throngs
 The birth of themes for poets' songs.

THE STROLLER.

THE college days pass rapidly by, and are so filled with interest and pleasure that it is difficult indeed for THE STROLLER to decide what he should particularly call attention to in the life which is so familiar to us all. But as THE STROLLER sits quietly at his desk in the vain endeavor, he fears to put "in words the thoughts feels." The shouts of his fellow students playing foot-ball on the campus reach him—a miniature Yale and Harvard game in which some of the players are old enough to know better, he thinks, and who should be working or thinking ; others again, too young, in his opinion, to contend in a game where strong physical development is an essential, and who would do better both for themselves and this community, were they to make less noise. The grave and hypocritical STROLLER wonders after all, if he is not mistaken in his more serious views, and if the real cameos of college life are not the careless happy games which we all play together here with so little restraint, so much good feeling and to our great mutual advantage. It would seem indeed that the currents of our college life should all be restrained and regulated by the thought that those things which seem of such great importance to us now are transient, that they will all pass over, and that "Like the baseless fabric of a vision leave not a rack behind." The unity of college feeling should submerge all lesser contentions, and as the day is coming when we shall meet our fellow students in the outside world, shall we not anticipate it as an opportunity to welcome with feelings unmixed with any unpleasantness a man who was an associate in our Alma Mater.

THE STROLLER remembers an old saying which runs, "Better late than never," and as he gazes on the weather reports which are always a day late, and can usually be interpreted only as can dreams, i. e. by contraries, he wonders if this old adage has any truth—if it has, he fears it is not universal, and that this must be the exception which proves the rule. How consoling it is coming in dripping wet on Friday evening, and glancing at the weather bulletin to receive comfort from the fact that before you in bold, staring type is the announcement, "Thursday generally fair," or after your previous experience of Friday to learn from the placard on Saturday morning that Friday was fair. Strange and striking is the inconsistency between the prediction and the fact.

THE FUTURE LANGUAGE.

AS time draws to an end, 'tis plain
 Language must diminish,
 Until at last but one remain,
 And that must be the Finnish.

LITERARY NOTES AND BOOK REVIEWS.

WE have recently received eight of the Old South Leaflets, comprising the following: Ship-Money Papers, Pym's Speech against Strafford, Cromwell's Second Speech, A Free Commonwealth, John Milton, Sir Henry Vane's Defence, Sir John Eliot's "Apologie for Socrates," Letters of Hooper to Bullinger, and Extracts from the Important English Versions of the Bible from Wiclif's to the King James Version.

These leaflets are in a very convenient form, and readily commend themselves to students of history. They are published by the Directors of the Old South Meeting house, Boston Mass.

THE interest in college debating and argumentation is now becoming so general that The Principles of Argumentation, by George Pierce Baker, (Boston: Ginn & Co., Publishers. Price, $1.25) will fill a long felt want. The book contains 402 pages and an index, its object being to give to college students the fundamental principles of argumentation, as well as the way and manner in which arguments should be presented. The book is written in a very clear and concise style and contains many remarkably good subjects for debates, with the outline of thought and expression to be followed in each case. The suggestions to speakers are most pertinent and helpful, and we cannot recommend this book too highly.

that Pond's Extract is without equal for relieving pain, and that no other remedy should be accepted as "just as good."

Invaluable for Wounds, Bruises, Cuts, Sore Feet, Lame Muscles, also for Sore Throat, Hoarseness, Rheumatism, Inflammation and Hemorrhages.

Accept nothing as "just as good." Pond's Extract cures; imitations do not.

The Connecticut Mutual stands by itself and occupies a thoroughly enviable position in life insurance. It was never before so strong or so deserving of confidence as it is to-day and never had more of the public confidence than it has now.

It offers plain life insurance, as protection to the family, and tries to make it attractive simply by making it perfect to that end and by keeping its costs down to the lowest possible point. It tries to realize the ideal results of a legitimate business; and it seeks to attract to its membership only those who want only such results, and do not want a speculation on their family's protection.

The conservative course of the company has brought to it a conservative constituency, and these people are the best risks, for they are the people who take care of themselves; and they are the best members, for they are stayers.

At a gay resort by the ocean's side,
Where wealth, beauty and fashion reside;
A pair of lovers amid the increasing din,
Watch in rapture the tide coming in.

Pushing, shoving and straining their eyes,
An anxious crowd is moving about,
Watching with curiosity "the tied" going out.
